Reflection on the Second Reading: Romans 13: 8-10

This reading on the commandment to love follows Paul's instruction to the Romans to obey the rule of civil authorities. Paul understands all civil authority as subject to the law of God. Thus, since God is the ultimate authority, obedience ought to be given to the law of the land since rupture in society is ultimately in conflict with the unity God desires.

Paul tells the Romans that the only debt they are to incur is "to love one another." While the foundation of Hebrew law is based on the command to avoid certain wrongdoings such as murder, theft, and lust (see Exodus 20:13-17), Paul speaks of the law's foundation in proactive manner. Love is not simply avoiding actions that are evil, but love involves moving outside of oneself in order to support the lives of others. The command to love by no means replaces the ancient law, but instead, it buffers it and demands more than mere passivity. In the next chapter, Paul will provide concrete examples as to how love unfolds in charitable outreach to others. We see him begin to explore this idea at the end of this reading by bringing together the law and the life of the Christian: "Love does no wrong to a neighbour; therefore, love is the fulfilling of the law."
